MARONE VOTES SQUARELY WITH THE REPUBLI-POSITION-MAHONE WALKS UP AND DOWN AND MAKES SOME STRANGE STATEMENTS-ENSHILL-ACTION OF THE SENATE. [From Our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, March 14.-Yesterday was devoted to speculations in regard to the result to-day, and, incidentally, of course, the action of General Mahone was the main topic of comment. Towards evening the general opinion was that he would certainly go R-publican, and a rumor became current that with his aid Mr. Gorbam would be made secretary and Judge Critcher sergeantat-arms. The question of the Democrats pairing with the Republicans who are absent, and one of whom will not be elected until to-morrow, was also discussed, A geant-at-arms. This morning early specural Mahone went early to the President's house with Mr. Gorham, and subsequently left the Senate chamber with General Logan and Senator Don Cameron, caused the test vote was reached in the proceedings, and he voted squarely with the Republicans and against the Democrats, on Mr. Allison's motion to go into executive session, that vinced that he would not act with them on organization. This vote was received with applause in the gallery and caused a flutter among the reporters.

Senator Ben. Hill spoke at length, and never with more animation. He commanded ate will be postponed until to-morrow, and the attention of everybody, and I realized that after an early adjournment this afterhow powerful he must be on the stump in noon the Republicans will again go into Georgia. In reply to Mr. Conkling, who caucus. claimed the Republicans have a majority in Forty-Seventh Congress-Special Sesthe Senate, he said "there were thirty-eight Democratic senators here besides Senator Davis, of lilinois, and he has said he will vote with us. This gives us the majority, and no one of that thirty-eight dare vote with the Republicans," said be, " because in so doing he would be unworthy the State be represents. If a senator elected as a Republican were to come to me," said Senator Hill, "and effer to vote with us, I would repel him, because he would be unworthy of association with Democrats. General Logan ought to know, because he used to play the Democrat himself. He declared he had rather never have another Democratic committee than that Virginia should be dishonored. He did not say the Senator meant to do it, but he saw the dangers that surrounded him and the influences which were being brought to bear upon him.

Senator Hill again spoke, and said that right of the Vice-President to take part in organizing the Senate, but would not raise that question. "If," he continued, "you have but one, the vote will be 38 to 38. Who is that one?" [Laughter on the Republican side.] "Who is that one?" [Laughter on the Republican side.] "Who is that one?"
